This program is dedicated to the memory of
MARSHMAN WATTSON
Commodore — 1960

'Marsh' Wattson

IF a man's true measure is his service to his fellowmen, then Marshman Wattson was "eight feet tall."

Had "Marsh" Wattson concentrated on his own affairs as most normal men do, he certainly would have laid up a greater fortune during his life, cut off at just short of 50 years. Had he been just normally self-centered, he could have been much, much more widely known.

Instead, quietly and modestly he devoted most of his time and effort to unsung and sometimes unpopular public service, especially in the preservation of individual freedom. Many people who have benefitted—or may in the future benefit—from his work have never heard his name. And he was no more dedicated to the defense of freedom of speech for people who thought as he did than to the same freedom for those who opposed everything he believed in.

A democracy such as ours always needs citizens like Marsh Wattson, and this country has seldom needed them more than it does at the present. He will be missed, both as a man and as a symbol of outstanding citizenship.
